ADUs: The big picture

The ADU pilot expands housing options for both renters and homeowners by re-legalizing an important piece of the historic character of Chicago neighborhoods.
ADUs: Benefits

- Bring existing apartments into legal compliance
- Multigenerational living arrangements
- Aging in place
- Earn extra income
- Unsubsidized legally restricted and "naturally occurring" affordable housing
- Adding housing to support schools and local retail within neighborhood character
Passing the ADU Ordinance

- August 2019: ADU Initiative launched with Urban Land Institute
- May 2020: Ordinance introduced
- July 2020: Subject matter hearing at City Council
- December 2020: Substitute ordinance (SO2020-2850) passed
- May 2021: Ordinance goes into effect
ADUs: The pilot zones

- North
- Northwest
- West
- South
- Southeast
How many ADUs can you create?

"Conversion units" (basements, attics):
- One in buildings with 1-4 units
- 33% of total number of current units for buildings with 5 or more units

Coach houses:
- One per property
How can ADUs be made more affordable?

Owners can receive subsidies from Low Income Housing Trust Fund to reduce rents.
How can ADUs be made more affordable?

Beginning with the second ADU, every other unit must be affordable at 60% of Area Median Income (AMI).

How does affordability compliance work?

Applicants complete a recording document and annual affidavit.
Where do you start?

- Chicago.gov/ADU
- An online intake form will walk you through ADU-specific requirements
- Then apply for a building permit
The City of Chicago's Additional Dwelling Unit (ADU) program allows homeowners and other residential property owners to add living space in basement or attic apartments, or in backyard coach houses.

Applying for an ADU is a two-stage process. First, this application will ensure you qualify for the ADU program. Then, once you've received approval, you can apply for a building permit with the Department of Buildings.

Before you can apply for a permit with DOB, you will also need to submit a neighbor notification affidavit, as well as documentation for affordable units if you are applying to create two or more ADUs. You will be provided instructions on these items after completing this application.
